luglok N robe, cloak. Etymology: The ultimate origin of this word is no doubt Middle French la cloque, which was borrowed into English as "cloak". The word does not survive with this meaning in Modern French. How it reached Carrier is not entirely clear. It may have been borrowed from English, with the initial lu due to it being mistakenly taken to be from French, which is known to have happened in some other cases. However, if it was borrowed directly from English, we would expect it to be (lu)klok. Another possibility is that it was borrowed from a variety of French which retained the original meaning now lost in standard French. This would yield the attested form with /g/ rather than /k/, and so is the most likely account. However, it is not known whether some variety of Canadian French retained the original meaning of la cloque. (1) 'Et hinai' hits'u hunuhuyulhch'ul whe luglok dulk'un-i hit'uhayulhchooz. lugok N chicken. [Gallus gallus domesticus] Etymology: Loan from French le coq "the rooster". That the origin of this word is "rooster" rather than "chicken" is very likely due to the fact that roosters are more colourful and therefore more salient than hens. We imagine a Carrier person seeing the chickens belonging to the Northwest Company for the first time, pointing at the flashy male, asking what it is called, and receiving the answer "rooster" from a French-speaking fur trader. (1) Lugok ts'ulht'es te ulhki whe'unt'oh. Lhts'umusyoo N A clan name. Duoplural: Lhts'umusyoo-ne/070582 Etymology: From Witsuwit'en Likhts'amisyu, which in turn consists of Nisga'a laxts'imilx "beaver clan" plus the no longer productive Witsuwit'en plural suffix yu, which appears in Carrier as -yoo, q.v.. Nisga'a laxts'imilx is composed of lax "people, clan" and ts'imilx "beaver". Like other institutions consisting of a group of people, takes plural agreement, e.g. Lhts'umusyoo bunutsi "the Lhts'umusyoo crest", where bunutsi, q.v., is "their crest". Crests: tsa "beaver", q.v. and musdzi "owl", q.v.. Colours: black. Sometimes called Poliwelson in English, a name said to have been created by a Hudson's Bay Company factor who could not pronounce the Carrier name. (1) 'Uda' didoh Lhts'umusyoo, Lusilyoo, Kwunbawhut'enne, ndai buboozi' ts'utni. 'Andit Poliwelson, Japan, Grand Trung ts'utni. 'Long ago the names of the clans were Lhts'umusyoo, Lusilyoo, Kwunbawhut'en-ne. Now we call them Poliwelson, Japan, and Grand Trung.'

Lhts'umusyoo-ne N members of the Lhts'umusyoo clan. Duoplural: 002506

oo- PREFIX conative prefix. The meaning of this prefix is difficult to define, but it may be very roughly translated as "try to". For example, 'ootasdzeh means "I am going to gaff for (uo:fish)". The presence of the conative prefix indicates that I am going to try to catch fish with a gaff hook, but that I do not know for certain whether I will catch any. The corresponding form without the conative prefix, 'utisdzoh, means "I am going to catch fish with a gaff hook". Similarly, if I say techus ooslooh that means that I am setting snares for mink; the conative prefix indicates that I am trying to snare mink but do not know whether I will catch any. If I want to say that I snared a mink, I would say techus suslooh. There is no conative prefix here because I am saying that I have actually caught a mink. In these cases the conative is fairly straightforwardly translated as "try to". In other cases, its meaning is subtler. For example, yayalhtsus means "he whipped him", as in the sentence Nyoon t'et 'undunut'ih 'et huwa ooba se be yayalhtsus. "Because that girl steals her father whipped her with a belt." Here we are talking about multiple strokes of the belt, and it is implied that the belt actually struck the girl. In contrast, the form yoolhtsas, with the conative prefix, might be used in a sentence like Yeztli tutsus be yoolhtsas. "he flicks a whip at the horse". Here the whip may or may not actually strike the horse. There are also some verbs that seem to contain the conative but in which it cannot be assigned any meaning. For example, "to buy" contains an oo in the same position as the conative, with the same behaviour. The conative prefix absorbs the i of the first person dual subject marker id and the second person singular subject marker in. For example, "he is gaffing for fish" and "you (1) are gaffing for fish" both take the form oolhdzeh since the i of the second person singular subject marker in is absorbed by the conative prefix. Here is the imperfective affirmative paradigm of "to gaff for (uo:fish)":

2	oolhdzeh	oolhdzeh	oolhdzeh
3	oolhdzeh	hoolhdzeh	hoolhdzeh

Verbs containing the conative prefix invariably form the future with the aspect vowel a.

oo- PREFIX optative mode marker. See also: o-.This is both the principal allomorph and the underlying form of the marker of the optative mode, the use of which is complex but in general refers to events whose occurrence is uncertain. it immediately precedes the inner subject prefixes. it has the allomorph o- when it fuses with subject markers beginning with i, namely the 2s in- and the 1d id. Here is the paradigm of "to eat" in the optative:

	singular	dual	plural
1	oos'alh	ot'alh	ts'oo'alh
2	on'alh	ooh'alh	ooh'alh
