Sizi Gri N Jesus Christ. Etymology: A loan from French, but with a complicated history. The "gri" part comes from French "Christ", in which the final "s" and "t" are not pronounced. The French word goes back to Latin "Christus", which is borrowed from Greek , which means "the annointed one". It is the Greek translation of the Hebrew which is the source of the English word "messiah". "Sizi" is actually a bit of a problem. It obviously comes from something like English "Jesus" or French "Jsus", both of which go back to Latin "Iesus", which is a loan from Greek , which in turn is from Hebrew Yeshua. Yeshua is a short form of Yehoshua, which shows up in English as "Joshua". Yehoshua means "Yah saves", where "Yah" was the name of the national god of the Jewish kingdoms of Israel and Judah, so eventually one of the names of the One God. How exactly Sizi is derived from one of the European languages is a bit of a problem. If it were borrowed directly from English it should be Jizus since there is nothing in the sound system of Carrier that prevents the English word from being pronounced more-or-less as in English. If it were borrowed directly from French it should be Zezoo, since French "j' is borrowed as /z/ (as in Zaa from "Jean") and French "u" is borrowed as oo, as in Zooda from "Judas". It seems likely that Sizi passed through some other aboriginal language on its way into Carrier. (1) Ndi khuni unzoo-i, 'i khuni 'udechoo-i Sizi Gri, Yak'usda ooye' ghun. sooniya N money, precious metal. Poss: zooniya. See also: soonuya.Etymology: The immediate source of this word is Plains Cree sōniyāw , which matches perfectly in meaning and almost perfectly in sound. Since money was not in use pre-contact and the earliest contact with people who used money would have been with the fur traders who used Plains Cree as their contact language (via Sekani interpreters), this is a very plausible source. It has been proposed that the Cree word originated in Northern Iroquian, where it apparently meant "silver", from which it was borrowed into Proto-Central Algonquian, one of the descendants of which is Saulteaux. Plains Cree borrowed it from Saulteaux. An alternative etymology is that it comes from the native Carrier expression soo nuya "(s)he walks around well", the idea being that a person who has money is in good shape. There are two problems with this proposal: (a) if a noun were derived from this verbal expression, we would expect it to mean "a person who walks around well", that is, a rich person, not the thing the ownership of which makes one "walk around well". (b) the underlying verbal expression does not actually exist. That is, people never say soo nuya or anything related (e.g. soo nuhudilh "they walk around well" to mean that a person is rich, and if asked how to say that a person is rich, they never respond with this expression. (1) Sooniya int'i eh? s̲- PREFIX perfective affirmative. See also: z̲-.This conjunct prefix is the marker of one of the major types of perfective affirmative. it immediately precedes the inner subject marker. Here is a typical paradigm:

shoot [pa]

	singular	dual	plural
1	s̲usch'i	s̲ich'i	ts'uz̲ch'i
2	s̲inch'i	s̲ahch'i	s̲ahch'i
3	s̲uch'i	huz̲ch'i	huz̲ch'i

Notice that it has the allomorph z̲ in the first person plural and third person duo-plural. this is because these are conjunct prefixes. the allomorph z̲ appears in other person/number combinations as well if it is preceded by a conjunct prefix. for example, "I shot you (1)" is nyuz̲usch'i. the allomorph z̲ is triggered only by a preceding conjunct prefix, not by disjunct prefixes. notice how the disjunct prefix n= "in a loop" does not induce z̲.

go in a loop by boat [pa]

	singular	dual	plural
1	nus̲uski	nus̲iki	nuts'uz̲ki
2	nus̲inki	nus̲ahki	nus̲ahki
3	nus̲uki	nuhuz̲ki	nuhuz̲ki

the change of s̲ to z̲ after a conjunct prefix does not take place if it immediately precedes the d valence prefix. compare the paradigm of "shoot" above with the corresponding reflexive paradigm.

shoot self [pa]

	singular	dual	plural
1	naduzusch'i	naduzich'i	nazdudusch'i
2	naduzinch'i	naduzahch'i	naduzahch'i
3	nadudusch'i	nahududusch'i	nahududusch'i

this prefix combines with the l valence prefix to form lh, e.g. nulhgai "he ran in a loop". it combines with the lh valence prefix to form lh, e.g. yulht'e "he roasted it".

te̲sdle N Interior Fraser Coho salmon. Locally known as "winter salmon", these look like sockeye but run very late, in November and even December, sometimes under the ice, and go all the way up to Takla Lake. They are rare now but were reportedly common prior to the Hell's Gate landslide of February 23, 1914, which blocked the Fraser River just downstream of Boston Bar. They are said to be fattier than sockeye. [Oncorhynchus kisutch] See also: te̲sdli.Etymology: "they run underwater", in contrast to sockeye, which run on or near the surface.

te̲sdli N Interior Fraser Coho salmon. Variant of te̲sdle, q.v. [Oncorhynchus kisutch] [MO2817] te̲suti N bottom bait. "A very small fish is used as bait and fastened in this wise to the implement: the whole of the bone pin including the sinew line to which it is attached is passed through the anal part of the fish and then one-half of it is inserted lengthwise through the body of the fish commencing from the point of initial insertion of the sinew line to the head, after which the whole is dropped in the water and held as in the case of the bone coregone bait. The larger fish, generally the loche or turbot (Lota maculosa) which is very voracious, overlooks the other half of the implement left bare, and by gulping down the small fish gives warning to the fisherman, who instantly pulls up the whole, thereby sinking the bone in in the gills of the large fish which is thus easily secured." (Morice, Western Dene, p. 72) Usually made of the small end bones of the wings of the loon, or sometimes of the ribs of young beaver. (The fish to which Morice refers is the burbot, locally known as ling cod, Lota lota.) Etymology: "it lies on the bottom of the water".

-tsiyanjut N great-grandfather. Some people consider this rude but many people consider it perfectly acceptable. See also: -tsiyancho.

tsiye N moose calf. Etymology: A loan from Sekani, according to Morice (1932:2806). This seems likely in view of the transparent derivation of this term in languages such as Ahtna (Ahnta dictionary p. 388) as "that which is yellow". Carrier does not have a stem tsi for "yellow", and the related noun "ochre" t̲s̲ih begins with a lamino-dental. Moreover, in Carrier, no plausible source for the ye portion of the word is known. All of this is suggestive of borrowing from another Athabaskan language, but the actual Sekani source remains to be determined. (1) Tsiye 'ilhoh naoodiz̲ulh 'et duloo za bulh 'ut'en. 'The young moose stays with its mother for a year.' (2) Dak'et da' schulyaz tsiye s̲uch'i. 'Last fall my younger brother shot a calf moose.'

wa̲si N Canada Lynx. [Felis lynx/Lynx canadensis] Etymology: Loan from Gitxsan wish. The borrowing apparently took place in the early 19th century since Father Morice mentions that some old people still knew the old, native word, 'ool'en, q.v.. It is a bit surprising that a word for a long-familiar animal with an existing native name would be borrowed. The best explanation is probably that lynx skins were exported to the coast, where they were a luxury item suitable for distribution in potlatches. This would then be a case in which the suppliers of a good borrowed their clients' term for it, as was probably also the case with mai, "berry", q.v.. A parallel elsewhere is the borrowing in some native languages of chocolate-producing regions of Mexico of the Nahuatl term for "chocolate", because the Nahuatl-speaking Aztecs were major buyers. (1) Wa̲si goh za u'alh. 'The lynx eats mostly rabbit.'

-whut'en SUFFIX inhabitant of, citizen of, band. Although nominally singular with the plural whut'en-ne, is often used to denote groups of people, such as bands. Because of its use referring to bands, it has been mistakenly analyzed as forming nouns denoting places. However, band names formed with this suffix denote neither the territory of a band nor its headquarters or main reserve. For example, you can say Nak'aẓdli ts'u tisyalh "I am going to go to Nak'azdli", but not Nak'aẓdli Whut'en ts'u tisyalh. Similarly, you cannot say Nak'aẓdli Whut'en hooncha with the meaning "Nak'azdli (territory) is large". The clan name Kwunbawhut'en, q.v. clearly denotes a group of people, not a place. In Shoodewhut'en "Jew", it again denotes a group of people and contrasts with the base to which it is attached, Shoode "Judea", q.v., which denotes the place they are from. See also: whut'en-un.
