Preface

This draft lexicon contains material from Carrier as it is spoken in the Stuart Lake and Trembleur Lake region by members of Tl'azt'en Nation, Binche First Nation, Nak'az̲dli Indian Band, and Yekooche First Nation. Dialect differences are noted where they have been identified but are not great within this area. It is far from complete, and probably contains mistakes, but it is hoped that it will nonetheless be useful.

There are a total of 63029 entries in the Carrier-to-English section and 72056 entries in the English-to-Carrier section. 345 entries are indexed by scientific name. There are 39 illustrations. 2740 entries are provided with etymologies, including 369 words believed to be borrowed from other languages. The Root List contains 649 roots. A total of 6075 stems are associated with these roots.

392 place names are listed in this lexicon. Many others are known but are not printed here because they have not yet been confirmed. Although the place names listed here are in general believed to be accurate (a few are marked as uncertain), the inclusion of these place names should not be taken as the official position of the Tl'azt'en Nation, Binche First Nation, Nak'az̲dli Indian Band, Yekooche First Nation, or the Carrier-Sekani Tribal Council for legal or diplomatic purposes.

This dictionary can be printed in four writing systems. The Carrier Linguistic Committee writing system is the one most widely used by Carrier people. It is based on the Roman alphabet, using letters and combinations of letters as in English where possible. The Morice Roman system is derived from the writing system used by Father Adrien-Gabriel Morice in his scholarly publications and in the third (1938) edition of the prayerbook. Quite a few elders learned to read the prayerbook in this writing system, but few if any Carrier people have ever learned to write in it. That is because it is subphonemic. That is, it distinguishes fine details of pronounciation that are predictable for fluent speakers of the language, and hence are very difficult for fluent speakers to bring to consciousness and write down. A few people write in a modified version of Morice's system in which the unnecessary detail is eliminated and special symbols are replaced by Roman letters. People who can read the prayerbook generally find it fairly easy to read this modified version. The third writing system is the Carrier Syllabics, created in 1885 by Father Morice. Although at one time many people knew this writing system, only a few know it today. The dictionary can also be printed in the International Phonetic Alphabet. This is a writing system used by linguists throughout the world.

This copy of the dictionary uses the Carrier Linguistic Committee writing system. If you would prefer a copy in another writing system, please contact the Yinka Dene Language Institute.

After consultation with a number of elders, vulgar expressions and sexual terminology that some people may find offensive have been included. Not everyone agrees, but the majority of those consulted are of the opinion that such words are a part of the language and cannot be excluded from a comprehensive dictionary. Moreover, while swear words are not strictly necessary, sexual terms and terms referring to bodily functions are. A person who does not know such terms cannot communicate about necessary topics. It should also be noted that Carrier does not necessarily make the same distinctions as English between vulgar and polite terms for the same thing. For example, the English words "shit", "feces", and "excrement" all mean the same thing, but "shit" is considered vulgar, "excrement" polite, and "feces" polite and associated especially with a medical context. Carrier has a single word tsan for the same concept.

Material has been entered from a number of sources.
The largest part comes from Father Adrien-Gabriel Morice's 1932 Grammar and Dictionary or from his other writings. Father Morice gathered his material over many years from many speakers,[1] but after Father Morice left Fort Saint James in 1904 he corresponded for many years with Louis-Billy Prince, who answered many questions about the language. In 1931 Father Morice returned to Fort Saint James for a visit. During these three weeks, he and Louis-Billy Prince worked together all day every day except for Sunday. Father Morice's acknowledgement of Louis-Billy Prince's contribution was to send him two copies of The History of the Northern Interior of British Columbia. In the accompanying letter Morice explained that he could not sell since they were damaged, so he was sending them to Louis-Billy.[2] This dictionary contains nearly all of the words in Father Morice's Grammar and Dictionary.

Material derived from the works of Father Morice has been transliterated into the writing system used in this lexicon and has been modernized where sound changes are known to have taken place. Words entered from Morice and not yet confirmed with current speakers are identified by the letters MO in square brackets followed by the section number in which the entry is found. For example, the notation [MO174] indicates that the word is to be found in section 174 of the Grammar and Dictionary.

Where words derived from Father Morice's work have not been confirmed with current speakers, their pronounciation may not be correct. Although Father Morice was aware of the distinction between the plain (apico-alveolar) and fronted (lamino-dental) consonants at the end of syllables, he did not realize that this distinction is also found at the beginning of a syllable. Thus, the reader should be aware that words derived from Morice written with s, z, ts, dz or ts' at the beginning of a syllable may actually have the fronted counterpart of the indicated consonant. Father Morice also frequently failed to notice the presence of syllable-initial glottal stops, so here again the reader should be aware that in words derived from Father Morice's work syllable-initial glottal stops may be missing.

The next largest part of the information found in this lexicon is due to research

[1] Father Morice's first teacher of Carrier was Jimmy Alexander, who as a boy went to school in Williams Lake, where Father Morice was stationed before he was sent to Fort Saint James.

[2] This information comes from the late Mrs. Lizette Hall, Louis-Billy Prince's daughter.

carried out by the compiler since 1992. Thanks are due to the many Carrier speakers who have provided information, especially Russell Alec and the late Robert Hanson. Some of the material from Walter Joseph, Sr., Rose Pierre, and Bernadette Rosetti, and all of the material from Minnie Louie comes from recordings, preserved by the University of Calgary and the British Columbia Provincial Archives, of sessions in which they worked with Dr. Eung-do Cook in 1975-76. Thanks are also due to speakers of other dialects of Carrier who have been helpful in working out subtleties of meaning and usage that are reflected in this dictionary, especially the late Mary John, Sr. (S̲aik'uz̲), the late Bernadette McQuary (Lheidli, Nadleh, S̲aik'uz̲), and Archie Patrick (Stellat'en).

The next largest source is a set of field notes compiled by the late Robert Young (1912-2007) in 1939 as edited in 1974. Young is best known as an expert on Navajo, particularly as the co-author, with William Morgan, of The Navajo Language: a Grammar and Colloquial Dictionary. What is not so well known is that as a young man in 1939 Young accompanied John Peabody Harrington (1884-1961) on a tour of the Athabascan languages of Canada. The two spent three weeks of December 1939 in Fort St. James, where Young worked with one of the three sons of Louis-Billy Prince. Which of the three is unknown. Young elicited over 5,000 verb forms, in most cases in the form of extensive paradigms, together with a modest amount of other vocabulary. Young wrote in a modified version of the writing system used at the time for Navajo, which was sufficient to record the sounds of Carrier. Like Morice's, his writing system is subphonemic. Young's material has been phonemicized and transliterated into the Carrier Linguistic Committee writing system.

Young had a good ear and was generally accurate in his transcription. He was already sufficiently familiar with Navajo, after four years' study, to have a good idea of what to look for in Carrier, that is, what the various forms of the verb are and what distinctions might be made. His terminology reflects the grammar of Navajo and is not always ideal for Carrier, but it is clear what he meant.

Young's glosses are primarily in English, but he also made use of Spanish for meanings that might be considered vulgar and occasionally when he evidently felt that the meaning of the Carrier form was more concisely expressed in Spanish. I have translated his Spanish glosses into English.

The major previous modern dictionary is the Central Carrier Bilingual Dictionary (Carrier Linguistic Committee, 1974), compiled by Francesca Antoine, Catherine Bird, Agnes Isaac, Nellie Prince, Sally Sam, Richard Walker, and David B. Wilkinson, with appendices by Richard Walker and Shirley Walker. All of the entries in this dictionary are to be found here, sometimes entered differently or with corrections or amplifications. In addition, nearly all of the words used in example sentences in this dictionary are to be found here. Many example sentences are taken from this dictionary. Some are taken from other texts published by the CLC. This lexicon includes all of the entries in the children's dictionary Nak'albun Whudakelhne Bughuni (Yinka Dene Language Institute and Carrier Linguistic Committee, 1991), compiled by Irene Antoine, Catherine Bird, Ileen Heer, Mildred Martin, and Florence Sam.

It is hoped that the lists of stems and roots will prove useful in identifying verb forms not to be found in the main portion of the dictionary. However, as the aspectual system is not well understood, the aspectual categorizations of stems should be regarded as particularly tentative and likely to contain errors. The stem and root lists in this edition are far from complete.

Comments and corrections are welcome, as are confirmations of words marked as known only through Father Morice's writings. Photographs and drawings that might serve as illustrations for dictionary entries would also be appreciated.

This dictionary is generated from a database that also underlies a web dictionary. The web dictionary includes audio files, many more images, interactive maps, links to external resources, and various other features not available in this print version. Grammatical Information

Nouns

This lexicon provides four types of grammatical information about nouns. First, if a noun has different forms for singular, dual, and plural, the non-singular forms are listed. In most cases the non-singular form is a duo-plural, meaning that it refers to two or more. In general, only nouns referring to people or dogs have distinct non-singular forms. In a few cases the dual, referring to two, is distinguished from the plural, referring to three or more. These are almost all nouns derived from verbs. The dual and plural have the same suffix (ne), but the verb is one that is different in the dual and the plural. For example, one tourist is nunaduda-un, literally "one who walks around". Two tourists are nunadut'as-ne, while three or more tourists are nunadudilh-ne. This is because the verb "walk" takes different stems, here -da, -'as, and -dilh, depending on whether the subject is singular, dual, or plural.

Second, it indicates whether a noun is inalienably possessed. A noun is said to be inalienably possessed if it must have a possessive prefix attached, indicating to whom it belongs. For example, the stem meaning "arm" is -gan. gan, however, is not a word that can be used by itself. It is necessary to indicate whose arm it is, e.g. sgan "my arm". To refer to an arm without indicating whose it is, it is necessary to say 'ugan "someone's arm, an arm". In general, body parts and kinship terms are inalienably possessed. When a noun is inalienably possessed, it is entered with a preceding hyphen. Thus, "arm" is entered as -gan. Such hyphens are ignored in alphabetization with the exception that forms with leading hyphens are listed after otherwise identical forms without leading hyphens.

Third, information is given about the way in which possession of a noun is indicated. If the noun is derived from a verb and is internally conjugated (e.g. benusgoo-i "my vehicle", literally "the thing by means of which I drive around", this is indicated in a grammar note.[3] If possession of a noun is marked by possessive prefixes, information as to which set of prefixes is used is given as the noun's pclass. The pclass is 1, 2, 3 or 4, referring to the main noun classes.

There are four main classes of noun, exemplified by the paradigms below. Which nouns belong to which class is largely, though not entirely, predictable. Most nouns whose stem begins with a consonant other than glottal stop (') belong to class 1. Most nouns beginning with glottal stop belong to class 2. Most nouns beginning with a vowel belong to class 3. However, some nouns beginning with glottal stop belong to class 1, and a few nouns beginning with a consonant other than glottal stop belong to class 2. Class 4, which differs only slightly from class 3, consists of a small number of nouns with stem beginning with a vowel. In most cases the noun class is not indicated. In these cases it is safe to assume that the noun belongs to the class predicted by the above rules.

[3] Marking of internally-conjugated deverbal nouns is incomplete at present.

Within class 1 the second person singular prefix takes three forms. The usual form of the prefix is n-, which becomes m- before nouns beginning with b. Before all nouns beginning with m, and most or all nouns beginning with n, the prefix is nyu-. There is some variation among speakers as to whether particular nouns beginning with n take the prefix n- or nyu-.

Class 4 nouns will occasionally be found with a double possessive prefix in the third person singular. For example, instead of the more traditional and correct bulhtus "his sister", oobulhtus is sometimes encountered. This innovation appears to be centered in the Nak'az̲dli community but has been heard from speakers from other areas and is apparently spreading.

Another case of variation in the form of a prefix concerns the areal prefix wh- with class 1 nouns. When the noun stem begins with a labial consonant (b, m) the prefix changes to h-. When the noun stem begins with a velar consonant (k, k', g, kh, gh), the prefix changes to h- and the initial consonant of the stem becomes rounded, that is, changes to kw, kw', gw, khw, or ghw.[4]

The abbreviations used below are as follows

1s
: First person singular, e.g. "my mittens".

1p
: First person plural, e.g. "our mittens".

2s
: Second person singular, e.g. "your (one person) mittens".

2p
: Second person plural, e.g. "your (two or more people) mittens".

3s
: Third person singular, e.g. "his/her/its mittens".

3p
: Third person plural, e.g. "their mittens".

Ref
: Reflexive, e.g. "his/her own mittens". This is used when the clause has a third person subject that is the same as the possessor of the noun.

Obv
: Obviative. This means "his/her/its" but is used in place of the plain third person singular or the reflexive when the clause has a third person singular subject that is not the same as the possessor of the noun.

Rec

[4] Note that for most speakers ghw is pronounced the same as w and is often written w.

Reciprocal, meaning “each other’s”. This is very rare on nouns but not uncommon as the object of postpositions.

h-y

This is the plural obviative, meaning “his/her/its”, used when the clause has a third person plural subject disjoint from the third person singular possessor of the noun.

Areal

The areal means “it’s” and is used when the third person possessor is saliently areal or spatial.

Ind

Indefinite. This means “someone’s” or “a(n)” and is used primarily with inalienably possessed nouns (mostly body parts and kinship terms), e.g. ’ugan, “someone’s arm, an arm”.

Class 1a — dayi "chief"

Areal	whulhtus	Ind	'ulhtus

Finally, the possessed stem of the noun may be listed in the poss field. For many nouns the stem to which the possessive prefixes are attached is not the same as the free form. For example, "knife" is lhuztih when free, but has the stem -luzti' when possessed, as in neluzti' "our knife".

Verbs

One of the main divisions of Carrier verbs is based on what valence prefix, if any, they have. The valence prefix is the prefix that immediately precedes the stem. A verb may have no valence prefix, in which case it is referred to as having 0-valence, or it may have a lh, l, or d. The valence prefixes frequently combine with the preceding prefix. This is most frequently an inner subject prefix, so there appear to be several different sets of subject markers. In fact, there is just one, with the same subject marker realized differently according as it combines with the different valence prefixes. This is illustrated by the following examples of imperfective affirmative paradigms of verbs with each of the four valences.

0-Valence — To Stew

	singular	dual	plural
1	usliz	idliz	ts'uliz
2	inliz	uhliz	uhliz
3	uliz	huliz	huliz

lh-Valence — To Roast

	singular	dual	plural
1	ust'es	ilt'es	ts'ulht'es
2	ilht'es	ulht'es	ulht'es
3	ulht'es	hulht'es	hulht'es

l-Valence —To Rest

	singular	dual	plural
1	nazyis	nailyis	nats'ulyis
2	nailyis	nalhyis	nalhyis
3	nalyis	nahulyis	nahulyis

d-Valence —To Drink

	singular	dual	plural
1	usnai	itnai	ts'utnai
2	intnai	utnai	utnai
3	utnai	hutnai	hutnai

The valence prefixes listed are abstract underlying forms and may be realized differently in particular forms. The d valence prefix in particular is frequently not realized or realized only indirectly, through its effect on the following stem by the grammatical rule known as the D-Effect. Valence prefix-stem combinations shown represent the underlying form, with valence prefix and stem separated by a hyphen. Thus, nagelh "he is packing back" is represented as d-ghelh, the underlying form that is converted into the surface gelh by the D-Effect rule. Note that Carrier permits the valence prefix sequences d-lh and lh-d. Listings of non-zero valence prefixes are believed to be accurate; however, some stems listed as having the 0-valence prefix probably have non-overt d-valence prefixes. These are gradually being identified.

Similarly, the verb stem shown may not be precisely as it surfaces in the actual form due to the D-Effect in first person dual subject forms. Thus, the verb stem shown for digai "we (2) are hairy" is -ghai, which becomes -gai in the first person dual under the influence of the underlying d of the subject prefix id-.

The D-Effect is a set of phonological interactions in Athabascan languages between two /d/-final prefixes, the /d/-valence prefix and the first person dual subject marker, and the following consonant, which is either the initial consonant of the verb stem or a valence prefix.

The set of interactions between either the final /d/ of the first person dual subject marker or the /d/ valence prefix and the following consonant, is referred to as the D-Effect. These interactions take place only with certain following consonants, as illustrated below.

The D-Effect

C_2	Result	1D	3S	Gloss
'	t'	it'alh	u'alh	eat
gh	g	igoh	ughoh	string (snowshoes)
l (__V)	dl	nidlat	nulat	float around lh	l	ilgi	ulhgi	dry
n	tn	hootnih	whunih	be awake
w	gw	igwus	uwus	be ticklish
y	j	hijih	huyih	shout
z	dz	nidzoot	nuzoot	skate around
z̲	d̲z̲	nid̲z̲un	nin̲z̲un	think

The condition in the case of /l/ is that /l/ be followed immediately by a vowel, that is, that it be the initial consonant of the verb stem. Where the /l/ is the valence prefix it will necessarily be followed by the initial consonant of the stem. In this case, the /d/ is invariably deleted without a trace. For example, the 3s of "run around" is nulgaih, with l-valence. The 1d is nilgaih. Here the /d/ of the 1d subject prefix /id/ disappears.

The terms d-class, n-class, and wh-class refer to categories in the system of noun classification. These refer roughly to things that are stick-like, round, and saliently two- or three-dimensional respectively. For example, the generic form lhyul is the word meaning "it is white" that is appropriate for most objects, such as a book or a cup. The d-class form dulyul is appropriate for describing a cane or a tree. The n-class form nulyul is appropriate for describing someone's face or a ball. The wh-class form whulyul is appropriate for describing a house. In a number of constructions wh-class forms are also used in reference to clauses. For example, "I like beaver tail" is Tsache oonust'i.. Here the object of the verb "like" is the noun phrase tsache "beaver tail". "I like eating beaver tail" is Tsache us'alh-un hoonust'i. Here the verb "I like" takes the prefix wh (realized as h before oo) because its object is the clause Tsache us'alh-un "I eat beaver tail".

An important part of the Carrier lexicon is the set of classificatory verbs, used to describe the handling and location of objects of different types. The stems of classificatory verbs convey no information other than the type of object; what action is performed is determined by the choice of derivational prefixes. The following list illustrates the range of verbs that may be derived from the stem for handling two dimensional flexible objects (e.g. shirts).[5]

behanaitilhchus̲	he is going to take it out didutalhchus̲	he is going to hold it up dughaitalhchus̲	he is going to hang it up k'italhchus̲	he is going to put it on (the table)
k'unaitalhchus̲	he is going to put it back on (the table)
sanaitilhchus̲	he is going to bring it back yughatilhchus̲	he is going to give it to her yughutilhchuz̲	he is going to lend it to her nutilhchuz̲	he is going to carry it around
'atilhchus̲	he is going to bury it taitlhchus̲	he is going to submerge it naitilhchus̲	he is going to put it on the ground
yaiyutilhchus̲	he is going to bring it ashore

The categories into which objects are divided are illustrated below where forms of "he will give me" appropriate to a variety of objects are given. In the first column are listed the abbreviations used for these categories in dictionary entries. Notice that some but not all of these bases permit cross-classification by means of the absolutive prefixes. Where a classificatory verb is also classified via the absolutive prefix system, this information is added to the abbreviation for the classificatory verb category. For example, the abbreviation lro-d means that the verb class is "long, rigid object" and that it is further marked by the d absolutive prefix.

[5] The two stem variants observed in these examples, chus̲ and chuz̲, reflect different aspects. The former is momantaneous, the latter durative.

he will give me

sdo-gen	non-plural default object (chair)	sghati'alh
sdo-n	non-plural n-class object (ball)	sghanta'alh
sdo-d	non-plural d-class object (name)	sghaduta'alh
sdo-wh	non-plural wh-class object (house)	sghaoota'alh
mdo-gen	plural default objects (chairs)	sghatililh mdo-n	plural n-class objects (balls)	sghantalilh
mdo-d	plural d-class objects (names)	sghadutalilh
mdo-wh	plural wh-class objects (houses)	sghaootalilh
euo-gen	effectively uncountable generic objects (sugar)	sghatidzih
euo-n	effectively uncountable n-class objects (berries)	sghantadzih
euo-d	effectively uncountable d-class objects (toothpicks)	sghadutadzih
lro-gen	long rigid object (canoe)	sghatitelh
lro-d	long rigid d-class object (stick)	sghadutatelh body	body (dog)	sghatilhtelh
coc	contents of open container (cup of tea)	sghatikalh
2df	2-dimensional flexible object (shirt)	sghatilhchus̲
mushy	mushy stuff (mud)	sghatitloh
liquid	liquid (water)	sghatilhdzo
hay	hay-like (hay)	sghadutalhdzo
fluffy	fluffy stuff (down)	sghantalhdo

The choice between the plural and non-plural default verbs is not entirely straightforward. A single object calls for the non-plural verb, three or more for the plural verb. Two objects usually, but not always, take the non-plural verb. The plural default verb is also used for certain single items namely ropes and fishnets, perhaps because these are considered to consist of multiple coils and meshes.

In the dictionary, classificatory verbs are indicated by the notation "classv" followed by the abbreviation for the category. In a few cases, the meaning of the verb is sufficiently specialized that the category information adds nothing to the definition. In most cases, however, the category information is important. For example, the forms sghatilhchus̲ and sghatitilh are both glossed "he is going to give me". The category abbreviations add the information that the first is restricted to two-dimensional flexible obects, the second to long, rigid objects.[6]

Glosses of verbs use certain conventions in order to specify information that is not straightforwardly translated into English. English does not distinguish the dual (referring to two people) from the plural (referring to more than two people), and does not distinguish singular, dual, and plural in the second person, glosses use numbers to specify this information. Thus, "you (1)" means that the form refers to a single person, "we (2)", means that the form refers to the two of us, and "we (3+)" means that the form refers to the three or more of us. A gloss that uses the term "non-plural" means that the form may refer to either one or two but not to three or more.

[6] Further details of the various aspects of the system of noun classification may be found in the paper Noun Classification in Carrier by Bill Poser.

The abbreviation u.o. stands for "unspecified object" and is used to mark transitive verbs in the form used without an overt noun phrase object. For example, 'us'alh is an "unspecified object" form meaning "I am eating" and is used without a noun phrase indicating what is being eaten. It can form a sentence all by itself. The corresponding specified object form is us'alh. This cannot form a sentence by itself, but must be used together with a noun phrase indicating what is being eaten, as in the sentence lhes us'alh "I am eating bread."

The basic paradigm of a Carrier verb consists of eight nine-member subject paradigms. These consist of the imperfective, perfective, future, and optative paradigms, each in the affirmative and negative. Of these only the future is a true tense. The imperfective is often translatable as a present tense form but strictly speaking it refers to an action that is not yet complete and may be used in reference to the past. Similarly, the perfective is often translatable as a past tense form, but strictly speaking refers to completed action and so may not refer to on-going past action. The optative is roughly comparable to the subjunctive in languages such as French and German. Optative forms only occasionally appear as main verbs (e.g. nuts'ooke' can mean "let's go around by boat") but are frequently found in a variety of more complex constructions (e.g. noske' sulhni "he told me to go around by boat").

These categories are indicated by the following abbreviations in brackets following the gloss.

FA	Future Affirmative
FN	Future Negative
IA	Imperfective Affirmative
IN	Imperfective Negative
OA	Optative Affirmative
ON	Optative Negative
PA	Perfective Affirmative
PN	Perfective Negative

How to Use this Dictionary

1. Finding Words

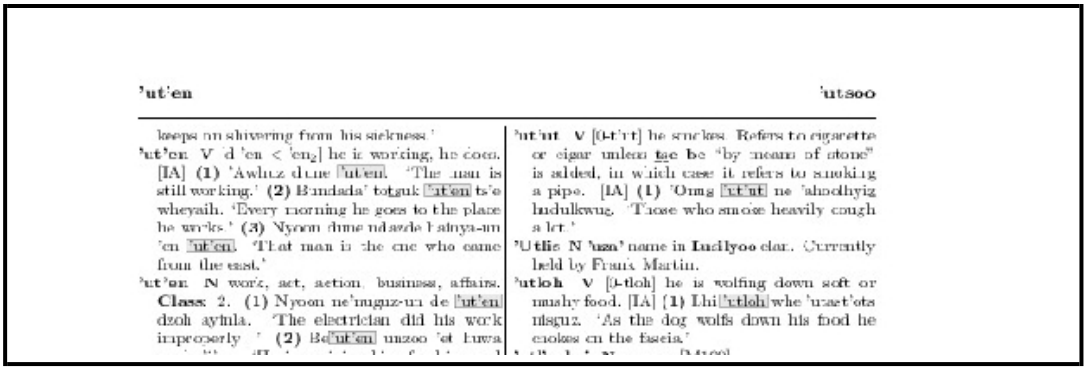
1.1. Parts of the Dictionary

This dictionary has three main parts. The first two are organized alphabetically, one from Carrier to English, the other from English to Carrier. The third is organized by topic. This is useful for reviewing vocabulary for a particular purpose but also for finding out how to say something in Carrier. If you cannot find what you want in the English to Carrier section, you may be able to find it in the topical index.

1.2. Alphabetical Order

The Carrier entries are organized alphabetically. In most respects the order is the same as that used in English, but there are some differences. Where a cluster of two or three letters is used to write a single Carrier sound, that group of letters is treated as a unit and alphabetized separately. For example, since lh represents a single sound, it is ordered after l. Thus, lhukw comes after lumudak even though h comes before u. The complete alphabetical order used is listed on page 23.

The first entry on a page is shown at the upper left of the page; the last entry on the page at the upper right. In the following example, the first entry is benats'udule'n, the last betk'ak. Note that the end of the last entry from the previous page spills over on to the page shown. The word listed at upper left is the first word whose entry starts on that page.



1.3. Spelling variation

One difficulty in looking up words is variation in spelling. Here are a number of things to look for:

a. The difference between the "fronted" consonants s̲, z̲, ts̲, dz̲, ts̲' and their plain counterparts s, z, ts, dz, ts' is difficult for many people to hear. Even fluent native speakers of the language often get this wrong. Therefore, you should consider the possibility that a word written with a plain consonant will be found in the dictionary with the fronted equivalent, as well as the possibility that a word written with a fronted consonant will be found in the dictionary with the plain equivalent. If you hear a word and have difficulty telling plain and fronted consonants apart, you should look under both.

b. The plain consonants ts and ts̲ and their glottalized counterparts ts' and ts̲' are often confused. If you do not find a word with one, it may be listed under the other.

c. The diphthong ui that occurs in words like k'ui "birch tree" is often written i.

d. The apostrophe that marks glottalization is sometimes written before the consonant that it goes with rather than after. For example, you will see S̲aik'uz̲ spelled S̲ai'kuz̲.

e. The apostrophe that marks glottalization is sometimes written after the first of the two consonants of a digraph rather than after the second as is standard. For example, you may see ts' written t's and kw' written k'w.

f. The glottal stop is frequently omitted, especially by non-native speakers, for whom it is difficult to hear. Thus, if you see a word with no consonant preceding a vowel, you should consider the possibility that a glottal stop is missing. For example, a word spelled a may really be 'a.

g. Many people have difficulty hearing syllable-final h, so it may be left out when it should be written or written when it should not be.

h. When next to a glottal stop or h, the u sound may become similiar enough to an a that some people will hear it and write it as a. Words with an a in this context may sometimes be found in the dictionary with a u.

i. English speakers unfamiliar with the sounds of Carrier tend to hear g for k', d for t', and kl or gl for tl' and syllable-initial lh. If you are trying to look up a word such as a placename written down by someone who does not know Carrier, you should be on the lookout for such mistakes. For example, the Takla of Takla Lake reflects Carrier tatl'ah.

j. English speakers unfamiliar with the sounds of Carrier are likely to write syllable-final lh as thl or th.

You should also be aware that written material may be in another writing system. The Carrier Linguistic Committee writing system used in this dictionary is the writing system in common use today and the only one in which much material in S̲aik'uz̲ dialect has been written, but you may encounter another writing system, the Morice system, especially if you read scholarly work about Carrier language and culture.

This is the system used by Father Adrien-Gabriel Morice in his many scholarly publications. Since his work is widely read, his spellings of Carrier words have also found their way into other people's writing. The 1938 edition of the Roman Catholic prayerbook also uses this writing system. If you need to read material in this writing system, you can obtain an explanation of it from the Yinka Dene Language Institute web site.

1.4. Forms Not Listed as Such

The greatest difficulty in using this dictionary (and other dictionaries of Athabascan languages) is that many words are not listed in the dictionary as such. This situation arises because word-formation in Carrier is so productive: many words can occur in many forms. In the case of verbs, a single verb root may underlie hundreds of thousands of forms. Of course, it is easier to find a word if it is listed as such, but it is often possible to find a word even if it is not listed in exactly the form that you are trying to look up.

1.4.1. Nouns

Nouns take on a number of different grammatical forms. In general, these forms are not listed. Only the basic form is listed. If you encounter the inflected form of a noun, you must be prepared to figure out the basic form. In possessed nouns a prefix precedes the noun stem. The prefix must be removed to obtain the stem. For example, to look up the word hubuludab, the prefix hubu must be removed to obtain the stem ludab. ludab is listed in the dictionary, so you will find out that it means "table". To work out that hubuludab means "their table", you must also know that hubu is the third person duo-plural possessive prefix. The section on grammatical information provides an outline of the most important aspects of Carrier grammar. Many affixes are listed in the dictionary. If you suspect that something might be an affix but are not sure, you can also try looking for it in the list of affixes.

Some possessed nouns differ from their unpossessed counterparts not only in having a possessive prefix but in changin their stem. Since such stem changes are no longer completely systematic, many possessed stems are listed separately with a cross-reference to the main entry. You should, however, familiarize yourself with the common stem changes.

Nouns referring to people also have plural forms. Irregular plurals are listed, but regular plurals are not. Regular plurals ending in ne and ke should be recognized and the plural suffix removed in order to look up the noun.

The suffixes yaz "small" and cho "large" are very common and may be added to just about any noun. Most such forms are not listed separately. If you encounter a noun ending in yaz "small" or cho "large", it may be listed under the form obtained by removing the suffix.

1.4.2. Postposition Prefix Complexes

Many postpositions cannot follow pronouns but instead take prefixes that mark their object. An example is the postposition ba "for". It is not possible to say si ba* "for me"; instead, one says sba. Although their meaning is different, the inflected forms of postpositions look very much like possessed nouns. These combinations of a postposition and a pronominal prefix are assigned the part of speech Postposition Prefix Complex, abbreviated PPC. Only irregular PPCs are listed as such. Otherwise, only the postposition itself is listed. The reader is expected to be able to recognize that a form like sba might consist of the postposition ba with first person singular object and to look it up under ba.

1.4.3. Verbs

If a verb is not listed in the dictionary, you may be able to figure out what it means by using the Stem List and the Root List, together with your knowledge of Carrier grammar and of the meanings of the various prefixes, many of which have their own listings in the dictionary. First, find the stem and look it up in the stem list. Then look up in the root list the root or roots with which your stem is associated. This will give you possibilities for the basic meaning of the verb. You can then work out the full meaning of the verb by combining the basic meaning with the meanings of the various prefixes.

For example, suppose that you enounter the verb nuhikel. The Stem List identifies kel as the the Perfective Negative and Future Negative stem of the root ke_2 "to go by boat". This form is obviously not a Future Negative form as it does not contain the t prefix that appears in all future forms. It is, however, a possible Perfective Negative form, with the h the third person plural subject prefix. The initial n might be the prefix meaning "in a loop, around", with the following u inserted by rule to separate it from the consonant h. Thus, we arrive at the correct interpretation: "they did not go around by boat".

One difficulty in analyzing a verb form is determining its stem. To a first approximation, the stem is the last syllable, which will consist of a consonant, a vowel, and possibly another consonant. For example, the last syllable of nuteskelh is kelh, which is also the stem. Unfortunately, the stem is not always the same as the last syllable.

One situation in which the stem is different from the last syllable is in D-Effect contexts. When the D-Effect applies, the final d of a prefix combines with the initial consonant of the verb stem. The first consonant of the last syllable, therefore, is not the same as the first consonant of the stem. To find the stem, we must undo the D-Effect. For example, if the verb form is 'ut'en "he is working", there are two possibilities. This could be a verb with stem t'en and no valence prefix, or it could be a verb with stem 'en and valence prefix d. In this case, the latter is correct.

Several other phonological rules complicate the relationship between the last syllable and the stem. If the stem appears to begin with s, it probably really begins with ts, where the t has dropped out due to a preceding s. In ussi "I am dirty", for example, the stem is actually tsi. Another such case is the rule that takes tl to lh following lh. For example, the true stem of "to knead" is tlus, but in nelhlhus "you kneaded" it shows up as lhus because of the preceding valence prefix lh.

2. Understanding Entries

Some entries are very simple, while others contain a great deal of information. The simplest entries consist of the headword, an abbreviation for the part of speech, and a gloss, that is, a short definition, as in the following example.

chulhghus N wood worm.

Names of plants and animals are often accompanied by the scientific name in brackets following the common name.

dasge' N White-tailed Ptarmigan. [Lagopus leucura]

Many entries contain one or more examples. Examples are numbered and followed by an English translation. The headword is highlighted within the example.

daskwun N roasting stick, stove poker, skewer. (1) Daskwun be 'utsung 'ulht'es. 'She is roasting meat with a roasting stick.' (2) Daskwun be 'ankw'us yuts'e'alht'o. 'He almost hit her with the stove poker.'

Entries beginning with a hyphen indicate that the word cannot appear by itself but must be preceded by a prefix, if the word is a stem, or by a stem, if it is a suffix. Entries whose headword ends in a hyphen are prefixes that must be followed by a stem. The following example shows three morphemes all pronounced de. The first is a word in its own right. The second is a noun stem that cannot occur by itself. It must either be part of a compound or preceded by a possessive prefix. The third is a verbal prefix.

de COMP if. (1) Hukwa'ninz̲un de sghudeoonya'. 'You can come with me if you want to.' (2) Nduhda s̲uli' de, nohlaoost'en sih. 'If you get sick, I shall assist you.' (3) Njan nenuhdil de la toosya'. 'When you come here, I shall go away.'

de- PREFIX into a container. Disjunct prefix. (1) 'Uloo ludi ooba deilhdzeh. 'You pour tea for mother.' (2) Lho detaidant'az̲-i 'uda' yudunulhmulh. 'She is already boiling the fish she cut up into the pot.'

-de N antler, animal horn. Poss: de. (1)

Entries for verbs are more complex. Between the part of speech and the gloss is information about the valence prefix, verb stem, and verb root. The valence prefix is separated from the stem by a hyphen. The stem is separated from the root by a "less than" sign, indicating that the stem is a form of the root. Roots may have subscript numbers. These are not pronounced but serve to distinguish stems and roots with the same pronounciation.

The following example indicates that the valence prefix is lh, the stem keh, and that this stem is derived from the root koh_1. It is not a mistake that the valence prefix is given lh while the consonant preceding the stem is l: the valence prefix is given in its underlying form. In this case, the underlying form lh is realized l because it follows the first person dual subject marker, whose underlying form is idud. (See the discussion of the D-Effect in the section on Grammatical Information for further information.)

dutalk'ulh V [lh-k'ulh < $k'aih_1$] we (2) are going to ignite.

Entries for verbs also include information about Tense/Mode/Negation, in square brackets following the gloss. In the example, the Tense/Mode/Negation information is IA, indicating that this verb form is in the Imperfective Affirmative. The full set of categories and abbreviations is given in the section on Grammatical Information.

The Tense/Mode/Negation information may be followed by a verb's aspect. In the following example, the verb is in the Customary aspect of the Imperfective Affirmative.

naztukih V we (3+) return by boat. [IA–customary] (1) 'Ukoh, ndazde naztukih te 'et ts'uhoont'i. 'We are always happy when we are returning home from down river.'

Entries for classificatory verbs indicate that the verb is a classificatory verb and specify the class. In the following examples, the first verb is a verb for handling two-dimensional flexible objects,the second a verb for handling the contents of an open container.

daidutelhchus V [lh-chus < chus_1] he will hold it up. [class: 2df] [FA] dainkaih V [0-kaih < kai_1] you (1) skim. [class: coc] [IA]

The classificatory information may also include information about absolutive classification. In the following example, the verb is a classificatory verb for handling long rigid objects that is also marked for a d-class absolutive argument.

sghadutatelh V [0-telh < tan_1] he is going to give me. [class: lro-d] [FA] (1) Duchun sghadutatelh. 'He is going to give me a stick.'

Some entries contain miscellaneous other pieces of information that should be readily recognizable. The entries for some placenames contain the lattitude and longitude of of the place. Quite a few entries give the etymology of the word, that is, an explanation of the word's origin. Some entries contain a more detailed discussion of the meaning of the word in addition to the gloss, a note on the cultural significance of the word, or an explanation of the grammar needed to use the word.

Glosses of verbs use certain conventions in order to specify information that is not straightforwardly translated into English. English does not distinguish the dual (referring to two people) from the plural (referring to more than two people), and does not distinguish singular, dual, and plural in the second person, glosses use numbers to specify this information. Thus, "you (1)" means that the form refers to a single person, "we (2)", means that the form refers to the two of us, and "we (3+)" means that the form refers to the three or more of us. A gloss that uses the term "non-plural" means that the form may refer to either one or two but not to three or more.

The abbreviation u.o. stands for "unspecified object" and is used to mark transitive verbs in the form used without an overt noun phrase object. For example, 'usyi is an "unspecified object" form meaning "I am eating" and is used without a noun phrase indicating what is being eaten. It can form a sentence all by itself. The corresponding specified object form is usyi. This cannot form a sentence by itself, but must be used together with a noun phrase indicating what is being eaten, as in the sentence lhes usyi "I am eating bread."

Glossing the optative form of verbs poses a particular problem since the optative does not have any single English translation. Optatives are therefore glossed as if they were not opatitves, with the information that the form is optative supplied by the [OA] or [ON] indicating the verb's Tense/Mode/Negation category. Thus, even though the most likely meaning of 'uts'ooyi is "let us (three or more) eat (something)", it is glossed "we (3+) eat (u.o.)", because it might be used in a variety of other contexts where it would not have this meaning, such as 'aw gak 'uts'ooyi ait'oh "we can't eat anything at all".

The abbreviation q.v. stands for the Latin phrase quod vide "which (you should) see"and is used for cross references. In the example below, we are told that 'ano is an irregular form of the noun whose stem is -oono and that for further information, we should look at the entry for -oono.

'ano N Irregular vocative and indefinite form of -oono, q.v..

— N put one's tongue on it.
— N scar (so). Typically, "scar (so) in the face". [abs: n]
'- PREFIX indefinite possessor. Attaches to nouns of classes other than class 2. This prefix is used most frequently with inalienably possessed nouns. when one wishes to refer to the item without indicating any possessor.
'- PREFIX unspecified object marker. A conjunct prefix. is used with transitive verbs when no object is overtly expressed immediately preceding the verb. contrast 'udek'a ut'ut "he is smoking tobacco", in which the object is overtly expressed, and 'ut'ut "he is smoking (something)", in which no object is present. has the allomorph 'u due to epenthesis when it precedes a consonant and cannot be syllabified into the coda of the previous syllable, e.g. in 'uts'utut "we are smoking (something)." contrast na'ts'oot'ut "let's smoke again", where it becomes the coda of the preceding syllable and no epenthesis is necessary.
'- PREFIX vocative. This prefix is used to form vocatives of kinship terms. it usually has the allomorph 'u- due to epenthesis between the glottal stop and the initial consonant of the stem. With terms referring to generations higher than that of the speaker (not merely older than the speaker) it is also used as the first person singular possessor unless the possessor is contrasted. thus, 'uba means not only "someone's father" and "father!" but also "my father". if, however, it is desired to contrast one's own father with someone else's father, the regular first person singular possessed form sba is used.
'a ADV quickly, early. (1) Duneyaz 'a nulgaih. 'The boy is running fast' (2) Shas 'a ne'ut'en. 'The grizzly moves fast.' (3) Tsa ghanaih tots'a whusanadaih. 'When beaver hunting he would always return early.'
'a N fog, mist. (1) '' (2) Hulhda' whe 'a hooni da'. 'Yesterday there was fog.'

widespread explanation for the Sekani term, the one given by Father Morice, is that it reflected the distinctive Carrier practice of a widow carrying the cremains of her husband on her back during the mourning period. This explanation was, however, rejected by Lizette Hall and is not generally known to Sekani people. Another explanation is that Sekani people acquired horses before Carrier people did and therefore remarked on the fact that Carrier people packed goods on their backs rather than on horses.

'utna N non-Athabaskan native person. Specifically, a native person whose language is not recognizably related to Carrier. It most commonly refers to coastal peoples such as the Tsimshian, Nisga'a, Gitxsan, and Haisla, but is also applied to interior peoples such as the Shuswap. Most speakers consider the Cree fall into this category, though they are generally referred to by the more specific term dushine. In Ulkatcho dialect it is applied to the Nuxalk. It is never applied to speakers of Athabaskan languages such as the Chilcotin, Sekani, Beaver, Slave, Kaska, and Tahltan, nor is it applied to Europeans or other non-aboriginal people. Etymology: Probably "one who may be taken prisoner", based on the verb root na "capture, take prisoner in war", related to 'ulhna "slave", as the only slaves kept by Carrier people were war captives. (1) Wheni 'utna 'aw bughuni lhts'udusts'o. 'We don't understand the language of the non-Athabaskan Indians.'

bosdun N American, white person. Duoplural: bosdun-ne/063545 Etymology: Loan from Chinook Jargon, , ultimately from English Boston. Most of the coastal fur traders that visited the Lower Columbia River area beginning with Captain Robert Gray and the crew of the Columbia Rediviva in 1792 were based in Boston. A folk etymology sometimes heard is that an early European visitor to the territory was from Boston and that his home was generalized to all white people. This is unlikely since the early white visitors were mostly French-Canadian and the English-speaking "gentlemen" were mostly from Scotland. It is unlikely that anyone from Boston reached the area prior to the Omineca Gold Rush in 1861, by which time Carrier people had been acquainted with white people for nearly 70 years. This is not normally used in this dialect. One speaker was known to use it, but he evidently got it from another dialect and decided to use it as a matter of personal style.

-che SUFFIX river mouth. Where a river or stream enters another body of water. Etymology: This is often taken to be the same as che "tail", q.v., but not only is the connection in meaning dubious but comparable forms in Southern dialects show that it is incorrect. In Southern dialects, "tail" is -che as in this dialect, but "river mouth" is -chek, as in Saik'uz dialect Khelhkoochek, where Khelhkoh "Stony Creek" enters the Nechakoh River. This is used exclusively in compounds. The free-standing form is tooke'che, q.v..

-cho SUFFIX big, large, fat, distinguished. Although this suffix usually has its literal meaning, idiosyncratic examples are found, e.g. gadulekcho "devout Catholic", q.v., literally "big Catholic". It sometimes serves as a marker of masculine gender when attached to the name of an animal. Whether it indicates a large variety or a large individual is variable. When added to a person's name it may indicate that the person is large or the older member of two people with the same name, but it often indicates that the person is distinguished. The distinction may be as an individual, but there are cases in which the children of an important person all had this suffix attached to their names. When applied to living things, usually indicates a large one but in some cases designates a distinct but related species, e.g. datsancho "raven", q.v., but datsan "crow", q.v., and chunihcho "fisher", q.v., but chunih "marten", q.v.. This suffix follows the plural suffix -ne.

deluglaf N telegraph wire, haywire. See also: Deluglaf.Etymology: A loan from English telegraph. When the Russian-American Telegraph project, intended to connect San Francisco to Moscow, was aborted on February 27, 1867 due to the successful laying of a cable across the Atlantic Ocean, a great deal of wire was abandoned as it was not worth the expense of transporting it back South. Native people used this wire, most famously to build a bridge across the Bulkley River at Hagwilget, but also for more mundane purposes, e.g. as baling wire or stovepipe wire. Wire of this type came to be known as "telegraph wire", shortened to "telegraph".

goozih N Whiskey Jack, Gray Jay, Canadian Jay. In former times, a pejorative given name applied to someone who talks too much. Now an epithet for a gossip, or, in the case of a child, one who constantly runs here and there, visiting different people, keeping up on who is doing what. In this case its use is affectionate, not pejorative. This use extends to Carrier English where the word is even made into a verb: a child may be described as "goozih-ing around". (The final /h/ is not pronounced in English.) Some people also apply this term to the Steller's Jay, q.v.. [Perisoreus canadensis] Etymology: The term is reconstructible to Proto-Athabaskan, where it is unanalyzable. One proposed etymology, that it consists of goo "motor around" and zih "next to", q.v., is incorrect. It is apparently based on the idea that the bird flits around from place to place. If it were, we would expect the verb to describe the way birds move, e.g. flying, not driving, and we would expect the order of the components to be like that in the corresponding phrase, with the verb after the postposition, e.g. zihgoo. In any case, there is no verb stem goo meaning "motor around". The verb root goo actually means "drive", not "drive around". To get "drive around" one has to add the prefix n-, as in nugoo "(s)he is driving around", q.v.. It originally referred to driving sleighs, was extended to horse-drawn vehicles such as wagons, and then again to motor vehicles. The idea that the bird is described as motoring around makes no sense in light of the culture and its history. (1) Nyoo goozih 'ahoolhdzin 'utsung neghundunut'ih. 'That Whiskey Jack is always stealing meat from us.' (2) Nyoon ts'ekeyaz goozih hiyulhni-un dulcho nulgaih. This kind of blanket is made by cutting rabbit skins with the fur on into strips in a spiral, so that the entire skin initially becomes one long strip, and weaving the strips on a loom. It is warmer and tougher than a plain fur. See also: dutnits'ut.Etymology: A compound of goh "rabbit", q.v. and s̲tl'oo "woven". Until a few generations ago, "rabbit" was pronounced gukh, so the original compound was gukh-s̲tl'oo. The simplification of the cluster khs̲tl' bled the sound change ukh to oh, resulting in the vowel u rather than o.

gus̲tl'oo tanuzget V [l-get] I am in a quandary, in a fix. Literally, "I have crawled into a rabbit skin blanket". A rabbbit skin blanket tends to adhere to one's body, so it can be difficult to get out of. [IA–mom] [MO2793] hadih INT hello. Etymology: This may be a loan from English howdy. Some elders say that it is not traditional. It is not mentioned by either Alexander MacKenzie or Daniel Harmon in their journals, nor is it mentioned by Father Morice, in spite of the fact that he has an extensive discussion of interjections. Nor is it used even today in the Blackwater dialects, all of which use dahooja "what happened? what's up?", q.v.. These factors suggest that it was borrowed from English in the late 19th or early 20th century after contact with English increased due to the influx of English-speaking settlers. On the other hand, Dakelh does have the /aw/ diphthong of the first syllable of howdy, so if this is a loan from English, it is a bit of a mystery why the first syllable is not /haw/ rather than /ha/. (1) Hadih! huzyin V [0-yin] one of them is standing. [IA–NC] [MO2632] huzyin V [0-yin] they are standing. This is the non-distributive form, which describes people standing in a single spot. To describe people standing in various spots one uses the distributive nodilhya, q.v.. [IA] i- PREFIX first person dual subject. Marks the first person dual subject of verbs. Most common allomorph of id-.

i- PREFIX negative. This position 2 prefix appears in the perfective negative and in the negatives of some stative verbs. It is realized only in those forms that lack an inner subject marker. It does not co-occur with negative s- but does co-occur with the disjunct negative prefix lh, q.v.

i- PREFIX progressive aspect marker. The progressive aspect indicates that motion is in progress toward a goal. for example, if someone is swimming around with no particular goal, the imperfective nube is used. if he or she is on the way from one point to another, the progressive ubilh is used. This position 3 prefix appears only when two conditions are satisfied. first, there must not be a position 2 subject marker (that is, a subject marker immediately preceding the verb base). this limits its occurrence to the first person plural and third person duo-plural, which are marked by outer subject prefixes, and the third person singular, which is marked by no subject prefix. second, it must be preceded by a conjunct prefix. therefore, it always appears in the first person plural and third person duo-plural, where the outer subject prefixes ts' and h provide the necessary conjunct prefix. in the third person singular it appears only when the verb contains a conjunct prefix. this distribution is exemplified by the progressive paradigms of "to travel by boat", where no prefix at all precedes the subject markers, and "to return by boat", where only the disjunct prefix na- precedes them.

to travel by boat

	singular	dual	plural
1	uskelh	ikelh	ts'ikelh
2	inkelh	uhkelh	uhkelh
3	ukelh	hikelh	hikelh

to return by boat

	singular	dual	plural
1	naskelh	naikelh	nats'ikelh
2	nainkelh	nahkelh	nahkelh
3	nakelh	nahikelh	nahikelh

compare ululh "it (generic) is floating", with no conjunct prefix, and dilulh "it (d-class) is floating", where the conjunct prefix d-, permits the -i- to appear. the preceding prefix must be a conjunct prefix; a disjunct prefix is not sufficient. thus, no -i- appears in forms such as 'oyalulh "it (generic) is floating by" and nadlulh "it (generic) is floating back".

i- PREFIX second person singular subject. Marks the second person singular subject of verbs. Allomorph of in- when it precedes the l-valence prefix and the lh-valence prefix.

-i SUFFIX non-human agentive suffix. This suffix attaches to verbs and derives nouns meaning "the thing that does X".

-i SUFFIX non-human non-areal relativizer. attaches to verbs to create the form used in relative clauses. (1) Mai oonanyin-i nincha. 'The berries you picked are big.'

in- PREFIX imperfective tense/mode marker. See also: n-.some verbs, especially statives, explicitly mark the imperfective by the use of this prefix. it occupies the same slot as the inner subject prefixes, which take precedence over it. it therefore occurs only when there is no subject prefix at all (3d person singular) or when there is an outer subject prefix (1st person plural, third person dual/plural). the i appears only if it is preceded by another conjunct prefix. it therefore always appears in the 1p and 3dp, but only in the 3s if a non-subject conjunct prefix is present. This distribution is exemplified by the imperfective paradigs of "to be slender" where no prefix precedes the subject markers.

to travel by boat

'In the summer children go barefoot.'

keyoh N territory, area, trapline, town, village, native band. The principal and traditional meaning is the area of which a certain group of people, basically an extended family group, are the stewards and in which they have the primary rights of usufruct. It is also applied to designate areas such as countries, settlements such as villages and towns, and seasonal sites such as trapping camps. It is also used to designate a trapline in the non-native sense, that is the area within which a certain person has the right to trap. However, "trapline" is misleading as a translation both in that it is not restricted to the right to trap and in that it is independent of the provincial system of trapline registration. Also, a non-native town as opposed to a reserve. Etymology: "beneath the feet", that is, the area one regularly walks over. This is not so obvious in Carrier, which has lost yoh with the meaning "beneath", but is made clear by cognates in related languages, e.g. Sekani keyih, Denaina qayeh, Atna qayax and Navajo kyah. (1) "Keyoh za s̲usda 'et sba hoonzoo," ni 'utsiyan. '"I enjoy it when I stay only at the village," said grandfather.' (2) Ndaho keyoh hooncha-un huyenugoo-i lhai hooni. 'The large towns surrounding us have many cars.' (3) Nts'ela 'uka'hut'en-un 'et keyoh hoonzoo whe'hoont'oh. 'The country where they usually trap is beautiful.' (4) Keyoh 'et whust'i. 'I live in town.' (5) Ndet keyoh k'us̲inguz? 'What band do you belong to?'

keyoh whuduchun N clan leader, steward of territory. The meaning of this term is a matter of dispute. It seems clearly to have referred originally to the steward of a territory. Some of those who give the primary role in traditional governance to the clans use this term for the most prominent clan leader, either an actual "head of all the clans" in the view of some, or a "first among equals" in the view of others. Etymology: Literally, "the stick of the territory", composed of keyoh, q.v. and whuduchun, q.v., said to be after the talking stick the leader possesses.

keyoh whudulhdzas-un N person who lives off the land. Etymology: Literally, "one who abrades the territory", meaning "one who is constantly using the territory".

-lala N the four fingers as a unit.
Lalah N [a nickname]. Etymology: From English Clara. Carrier lacks the /kl/ cluster so it was reduced to /l/. Traditional Carrier had no /r/ and replaced it with /l/. The addition of the final /h/ is too complicated to explain here but is due to the "glottal epenthesis" rule described by Prunet (1990). This was the nickname of Clara Pierre, ne Casimir, the wife of Damien Pierre, mother of Amelia Pierre, and grandmother of Edward John. She was the "mother" mentioned in the Lusilyoo clan song. (1) 'Utsoo Lalah. 'Grandma Lala.'
