area. N keyoh. The principal and traditional meaning is the area of which a certain group of people, basically an extended family group, are the stewards and in which they have the primary rights of usufruct. It is also applied to designate areas such as countries, settlements such as villages and towns, and seasonal sites such as trapping camps. It is also used to designate a trapline in the non-native sense, that is the area within which a certain person has the right to trap. However, "trapline" is misleading as a translation both in that it is not restricted to the right to trap and in that it is independent of the provincial system of trapline registration. Also, a non-native town as opposed to a reserve.

armour, coat of. N beusda. According to Morice (1888-89;140-41): "This had the form of a sleeveless tunic falling to the knees so that it afforded protection to the whole body save the head: — in hard fights the Dénés invariably shot kneeling. The armour or cuirass was of moose skin which, when sewn according to the proper pattern, was soaked in water, then repeatedly rubbed on the sandy shores of a stream or lake and dried with the sand and small pebbles adhering thereto, after which it was thoroughly coated with a species of very tenacious glue, the principle ingredient of which was boiled isinglass obtained from the sturgeon. Being again before drying subjected to a thorough rubbing over sand, it received a new coating of the aforesaid glue. When this process had been repeated three or four times, it formed an armour perfectly invulnerable to arrows over the parts which were thus protected."

band. SUFFIX -whut'en. Although nominally singular with the plural whut'en-ne, is often used to denote groups of people, such as bands. Because of its use referring to bands, it has been mistakenly analyzed as forming nouns denoting places. However, band names formed with this suffix denote neither the territory of a band nor its headquarters or main reserve. For example, you can say Nak'azdli ts'u tisyalh "I am going to go to Nak'azdli", but not Nak'azdli Whut'en ts'u tisyalh. Similarly, you cannot say Nak'azdli Whut'en hooncha with the meaning "Nak'azdli (territory) is large". The clan name Kwunbawhut'en, q.v. clearly denotes a group of people, not a place. In Shoodewhut'en "Jew", it again denotes a group of people and contrasts with the base to which it is attached, Shoode "Judea", q.v., which denotes the place they are from.

band, native. N keyoh. The principal and traditional meaning is the area of which a certain group of people, basically an extended family group, are the stewards and in which they have the primary rights of usufruct. It is also applied to designate areas such as countries, settlements such as villages and towns, and seasonal sites such as trapping camps. It is also used to designate a trapline in the non-native sense, that is the area within which a certain person has the right to trap. However, "trapline" is misleading as a translation both in that it is not restricted to the right to trap and in that it is independent of the provincial system of trapline registration. Also, a non-native town as opposed to a reserve.

band councilors. N neghunli-ne. Duoplural: 002852 band manager. N moodih. Father Morice glosses this "chief" in a number of examples, but at present it is used neither for the chiefs of bands or tribal councils, for whom dayi, q.v. is used, nor for "hereditary chiefs", for whom 'uza, q.v. is used. For most speakers, the final /h/ changes to glottal stop in the possessed stem. For those from Middle River, however, the final /h/ is deleted in the possessed stem.

big. SUFFIX -cha. Variant of -cho, q.v..
big. SUFFIX -cho. Although this suffix usually has its literal meaning, idiosyncratic examples are found, e.g. gadulekcho "devout Catholic", q.v., literally "big Catholic". It sometimes serves as a marker of masculine gender when attached to the name of an animal. Whether it indicates a large variety or a large individual is variable. When added to a person's name it may indicate that the person is large or the older member of two people with the same name, but it often indicates that the person is distinguished. The distinction may be as an individual, but there are cases in which the children of an important person all had this suffix attached to their names. When applied to living things, usually indicates a large one but in some cases designates a distinct but related species, e.g. datsancho "raven", q.v., but datsan "crow", q.v., and chunihcho "fisher", q.v., but chunih "marten", q.v.. This suffix follows the plural suffix -ne.

bottom, at the. ADV 'onyus̲de. This is used among other things for "the bottom of the inning" in basebal.
bottom bait. N tes̲uti. "A very small fish is used as bait and fastened in this wise to the implement: the whole of the bone pin including the sinew line to which it is attached is passed through the anal part of the fish and then one-half of it is inserted lengthwise through the body of the fish commencing from the point of initial insertion of the sinew line to the head, after which the whole is dropped in the water and held as in the case of the bone coregone bait. The larger fish, generally the loche or turbot (Lota maculosa) which is very voracious, overlooks the other half of the implement left bare, and by gulping down the small fish gives warning to the fisherman, who instantly pulls up the whole, thereby sinking the bone in in the gills of the large fish which is thus easily secured." (Morice, Western Dene, p. 72) Usually made of the small end bones of the wings of the loon, or sometimes of the ribs of young beaver. (The fish to which Morice refers is the burbot, locally known as ling cod, Lota lota.)

char. [Salvelinus namaycush] N bit. Locally known as char.
char, dried. N bit sugi.
char, half-dried. N bitk'ai. This literally refers to fish that has been cut up in preparation for drying rather than to the drying itself. In this and a few other cases k'ai is used rather than the usual gi or sugi, which explicitly refer to the drying.
char, large. N bitcho.
char, our. N nebit.
char, smoked roast. N 'ut'es.
char, smoked roast. N bitt'es. This term refers to char that is first spitted and roasted, then smoked for two days over a fire. k'us (Green Alder) is considered the best wood for this.
char gills. N bitk'us.
char grease. N tsachoghe. A reddish brown liquid with a very strong taste made from bit "char", q.v., by allowing them to rot, pouring in boiling water, and skimming the grease off the top. Similar to sleghe, q.v. but made locally. It is mostly used as bait for trapping but is also eaten by people and used as medicine for colds and things like that.
char net. N bitlembil.
char roe. N bitk'oon.
char spawning season. N bittazulh.
character. PRO yi'un. [pejorative] characteristic. PART tuzai. This particle immediately following a verb converts the verb phrase from a description of an ephemeral state or event to a description of a characteristic property, that is, a permanent, or at least, long-term, state. For example, the verb yalhduk by itself means "he is speaking". yalhduk tuzai means "he is talkative".

chestlatta. N Tsistl'ata. Morice conflates Cheslatta Lake with the little lake east of cheslatta called 'ulak'et, which is the one originally called saint mary's lake in English. ironically, Morice's conflation is now in a sense correct; as a result of the construction of the Kenney Dam, the land that once separated Saint-Mary's Lake from Cheslatta Lake is submerged, and the two lakes are one.

citizen. N whut'en-un. Duoplural: whut'en-ne This is frequently suffixed to place names and band names to form terms meaning "inhabitant of X", "member of band X".

citizen of. SUFFIX -whut'en. Although nominally singular with the plural whut'en-ne, is often used to denote groups of people, such as bands. Because of its use referring to bands, it has been mistakenly analyzed as forming nouns denoting places. However, band names formed with this suffix denote neither the territory of a band nor its headquarters or main reserve. For example, you can say Nak'azdli ts'u tisyalh "I am going to go to Nak'azdli", but not Nak'azdli Whut'en ts'u tisyalh. Similarly, you cannot say Nak'azdli Whut'en hooncha with the meaning "Nak'azdli (territory) is large". The clan name Kwunbawhut'en, q.v. clearly denotes a group of people, not a place. In Shoodewhut'en "Jew", it again denotes a group of people and contrasts with the base to which it is attached, Shoode "Judea", q.v., which denotes the place they are from.

conative prefix. PREFIX oo-. The meaning of this prefix is difficult to define, but it may be very roughly translated as "try to".

For example, 'ootasdzeh means "I am going to gaff for (uo:fish)". The presence of the conative prefix indicates that I am going to try to catch fish with a gaff hook, but that I do not know for certain whether I will catch any. The corresponding form without the conative prefix, 'utisdzoh, means "I am going to catch fish with a gaff hook". Similarly, if I say techus ooslooh that means that I am setting snares for mink; the conative prefix indicates that I am trying to snare mink but do not know whether I will catch any. If I want to say that I snared a mink, I would say techus s̲uslooh. There is no conative prefix here because I am saying that I have actually caught a mink. In these cases the conative is fairly straightforwardly translated as "try to". In other cases, its meaning is subtler. For example, yayalht̲s̲us̲ means "he whipped him", as in the sentence Nyoon t'et 'undunut'ih 'et huwa ooba s̲e be yayalht̲s̲us̲. "Because that girl steals her father whipped her with a belt." Here we are talking about multiple strokes of the belt, and it is implied that the belt actually struck the girl. In contrast, the form yoolht̲s̲as̲, with the conative prefix, might be used in a sentence like Yez̲tli tut̲s̲us̲ be yoolht̲s̲as̲. "he flicks a whip at the horse". Here the whip may or may not actually strike the horse. There are also some verbs that seem to contain the conative but in which it cannot be assigned any meaning. For example, "to buy" contains an oo in the same position as the conative, with the same behaviour. The conative prefix absorbs the i of the first person dual subject marker id and the second person singular subject marker in. For example, "he is gaffing for fish" and "you (1) are gaffing for fish" both take the form oolhdzeh since the i of the second person singular subject marker in is absorbed by the conative prefix. Here is the imperfective affirmative paradigm of "to gaff for (uo:fish)":

	singular	dual	plural
1	oosdzeh	ooldzeh	ts'oolhdzeh
2	oolhdzeh	oolhdzeh	oolhdzeh
3	oolhdzeh	hoolhdzeh	hoolhdzeh

Verbs containing the conative prefix invariably form the future with the aspect vowel a.

[abs: 0] [PA] [l-to] This means that the speaker counted the wrong things, made a calculation using the wrong inputs, or that the entirely correct calculation led to a bad result. For example, a person who receives money, counts it, and discovers that he has received more than is due him might exclaim oonazto! to express his dismay that, by counting the money, he discovered the excess, which he will have to refund. It contrasts with nintaoonizto, q.v., which means that the speaker made an error in the calculation.

distinguished. SUFFIX -cho. Although this suffix usually has its literal meaning, idiosyncratic examples are found, e.g. gadulekcho "devout Catholic", q.v., literally "big Catholic". It sometimes serves as a marker of masculine gender when attached to the name of an animal. Whether it indicates a large variety or a large individual is variable. When added to a person's name it may indicate that the person is large or the older member of two people with the same name, but it often indicates that the person is distinguished. The distinction may be as an individual, but there are cases in which the children of an important person all had this suffix attached to their names. When applied to living things, usually indicates a large one but in some cases designates a distinct but related species, e.g. datsancho "raven", q.v., but datsan "crow", q.v., and chunihcho "fisher", q.v., but chunih "marten", q.v.. This suffix follows the plural suffix -ne.

fat. SUFFIX -cho. Although this suffix usually has its literal meaning, idiosyncratic examples are found, e.g. gadulekcho "devout Catholic", q.v., literally "big Catholic". It sometimes serves as a marker of masculine gender when attached to the name of an animal. Whether it indicates a large variety or a large individual is variable. When added to a person's name it may indicate that the person is large or the older member of two people with the same name, but it often indicates that the person is distinguished. The distinction may be as an individual, but there are cases in which the children of an important person all had this suffix attached to their names. When applied to living things, usually indicates a large one but in some cases designates a distinct but related species, e.g. datsancho "raven", q.v., but datsan "crow", q.v., and chunihcho "fisher", q.v., but chunih "marten", q.v.. This suffix follows the plural suffix -ne.

fish oil container. N khes. The traditional container for fish oil consists of a fish skin into which the oil is poured. It is sealed by tying off the opening or openings with sinew. The skin is obtained by cutting off the fish's head, peeling off the skin, and removing any adhering flesh. In some cases the tail is left on so that it is only necessary to tie off the top. in other cases, the tail is cut off and it is necessary to tie off both the top and the bottom.

fishing for kokanee by driving them into a net, they are. V nehut'a. [IA] [0-t'a] This describes a technique used to fish for kokanee at night in which nets are set at an angle in the shallows of the river where the kokanee spawn and people in canoes, some holding torches of wood dipped in pitch, drive the fish upstream into the nets. The people who are not paddling pound on the canoe with sticks to make noise. This was done when Rusty Alec was a boy in the Tache River just before it enters Stuart Lake. They got lots of fish this way.

foot. PREFIX ke-.
foot. N 'uke. As the base for possessed forms it means a foot detached from the body to which it belongs, such as a rabbit's foot kept for good luck.
foot. N -ke. This has the meaning "shoe" in some compounds but not as a word in its own right.
foot, at its. PPC whudachun.
foot, bottom of. N -ketl'ah.
foot, his. N be'uke.
foot, his own. N duke.
foot, my. N se'uke.
foot, my. N ske.
foot, our. N neye'uke.
foot, their. N hube'uke.
foot, top of. N kent'a. As a body part, this is inalienably possessed. As a term for the vamp of a moccasin, q.v. is not.
foot, under. ADV ketl'ah. foot, your (1). N nke.
foot, your (1). N nye'uke.
foot, your (2+). N nohye'uke.

footbridge. N nati-un.
footpath. N duneti. A path or road for people, as opposed to a game trail.
footpath. N tiyaz. As opposed to a road.
footprint. N -k'oh. This is inalienably possessed in the sense that it must be used together with a possessive prefix. however, unlike body parts, ordinary (class 1) possessive forms are not restricted to reference to tracks made by the possessor. if, for example, someone excavates tracks in hardened mud and takes them away, he or she may refer to them as sk'oh "my tracks". The form one might expect by analogy to the alienable possession of body parts, se'uk'oh, is ungrammatical.

frightens them (non-human, many), he. V yaninulhjoot. [IA–dist] [lh-joot] The apparent conflict between the meaning of this verb, frightening many, and the grammatically singular object is due to the fact that plural object markers are only used when the object is "human", a category that also includes dogs but includes other animals only in the special case when they are seen as like human beings. This form would be appropriate, for example, to describe frightening fish or birds.

how about?. PART do'. This particle is used to focus on the next in a sequence of items. Probably the most common use is in exchanging greetings. One person will typically say: Soo 'int'oh? "how are you?". The other will respond: Soo 'ust'oh. Nyun do'? "I am fine. How about you?". In an extended exchange, one person might ask about the health of a third party, e.g. N'at do'? "And how about your wife?". It is also used to move on to a new topic on an explicit or implicit agenda.

human being. N yunka dune. Speakers disagree as to the meaning of this term. For some, it is restricted to indigenous people. For others, it includes all human beings.
human being. N dune. Duoplural: dunene/001362 This word has two different senses. One is "human being, person", without regard to sex. This is seen in expressions such as dune na̲s̲dle' "(s)he came back to life", q.v., literally "(s)he became a person again", which may be said both of men and of women, and in compounds such as yoodune "medical doctor" and yunka dune "indigenous person", q.v., which may be either male or female. The other is "male animal", often implicitly, "male human being". This is seen in the many compounds specifying the male, e.g. t̲s̲ilbayandune "male bald eagle", q.v., ndodune "male saint", q.v., and lhidune "male dog", q.v., and in contexts in which men and women are differentiated, in which case the men are dunene, q.v., and the women are ts'ekoo, q.v..

imperfective mode marker. PREFIX n-. This allomorph appears when no conjunct prefix precedes.
imperfective tense. PREFIX in-. some verbs, especially statives, explicitly mark the imperfective by the use of this prefix. it occupies the same slot as the inner subject prefixes, which take precedence over it. it therefore occurs only when there is no subject prefix at all (3d person singular) or when there is an outer subject prefix (1st person plural, third person dual/plural). the i appears only if it is preceded by another conjunct prefix. it therefore always appears in the 1p and 3dp, but only in the 3s if a non-subject conjunct prefix is present. This distribution is exemplified by the imperfective paradigs of "to be slender" where no prefix precedes the subject markers.

inhabitant. N whut'en-un. Duoplural: whut'en-ne This is frequently suffixed to place names and band names to form terms meaning "inhabitant of X", "member of band X". inhabitant of. SUFFIX -whut'en. Although nominally singular with the plural whut'en-ne, is often used to denote groups of people, such as bands. Because of its use referring to bands, it has been mistakenly analyzed as forming nouns denoting places. However, band names formed with this suffix denote neither the territory of a band nor its headquarters or main reserve. For example, you can say Nak'az̲dli ts'u tisyalh "I am going to go to Nak'azdli", but not Nak'az̲dli Whut'en ts'u tisyalh. Similarly, you cannot say Nak'az̲dli Whut'en hooncha with the meaning "Nak'azdli (territory) is large". The clan name Kwunbawhut'en, q.v. clearly denotes a group of people, not a place. In Shoodewhut'en "Jew", it again denotes a group of people and contrasts with the base to which it is attached, Shoode "Judea", q.v., which denotes the place they are from.

jay, canadian. [Perisoreus canadensis] N goozih. In former times, a pejorative given name applied to someone who talks too much. Now an epithet for a gossip, or, in the case of a child, one who constantly runs here and there, visiting different people, keeping up on who is doing what. In this case its use is affectionate, not pejorative. This use extends to Carrier English where the word is even made into a verb: a child may be described as "goozih-ing around". (The final /h/ is not pronounced in English.) Some people also apply this term to the Steller's Jay, q.v..
